From the Dean. . .

Dear Friends,

I have been touched by the expressions of congratulations and support that I received from alumni and friends as I assumed the presidency of the Association of American Law Schools. This is an exciting year for me personally, for one of the greatest pleasures I have as I travel around the country is to tell others about the wonderful things that are happening at Ohio State.

At the AALS annual meeting last January, I spoke about the pressing issues facing law schools. As I considered the many facets of legal education at the turn of the millennium, I realized that law schools must begin to think seriously about their role in training future leaders.

We all take as a given that lawyers are leaders. Graduates of the College of Law and other law schools have leadership roles in every branch of government. But one does not have to be elected to high public office to be a leader. Lawyers are leaders when they serve on corporate boards and in civic organizations. They are leaders when they provide legal services to the underprivileged. And they are leaders when they set an example of responsibility to their clients, their communities, and their families.

However, law schools rarely think consciously about how we prepare our students to assume these leadership roles. As I look at our curricular and co-curricular offerings, I am proud of the many opportunities we give our students to develop their leadership skills. And yes, we can and we will do more.

Teaching leadership at the law school level must have at its core the teaching of ethics and professionalism, for lawyers will continue to be looked to as leaders only if the public has confidence in and respect for the profession. At the College of Law, we frequently remind students that their professional reputations begin while they are in law school. We teach them that, whether they are participating in a moot court competition or a student organization election, they must conduct themselves honestly and ethically.

Our students show themselves as leaders in their diverse extra-curricular and co-curricular activities. Their leadership often takes the form of service to the school, to the profession, and to the community. The Women's Law Caucus is taking a lead role in updating the Legal Rights Handbook, published by the Ohio Women's Legal Assistance Coalition. Alternative dispute resolution students have worked at East Linden Elementary School to teach negotiation skills and have facilitated first-year study groups at the College of Law. The leaders of these projects have demonstrated tremendous creativity, resourcefulness, and professionalism as they have mobilized their fellow students to work on these projects.

While I have some serious concerns about law school surveys, our faculty's commitment to excellence in leadership has been recognized recently. The College's Dispute Resolution program was ranked by U.S. News and World Report as a number one program in the country. This ranking is based on the reputation of our program with dispute resolution experts around the country. The College of Law was ranked 35th for academic reputation and 43rd overall.

Dean Gregory H. Williams takes to the podium as President of the Association of American Law Schools.

Our faculty also sets a high standard for leadership and service in their work. Two of our professors have been honored this year to be asked to serve as leaders on the state and national level. Professor Ned Foley has taken a leave of absence to serve as Ohio's State Solicitor, and Professor Peter Swire will be on leave next year as he serves the nation as the United States Commissioner for Privacy in the Office of Management and Budget. Although we will miss them, we also look forward to their return to the College of Law and to the rich experiences that they will be able to share with us.

Teaching leadership also involves putting our students in touch with those who embody excellence in their field. This semester, we have attracted several outstanding speakers to the College of Law. We hosted Professor Randall Kennedy of Harvard Law School as the Strong Law Forum lecturer, Judge Guido Calabresi of the United States Court of Appeal for the Second Circuit as the Dean's Lecturer, and Princeton University Professor Amy Guttmann as the Schwartz Lecturer. Our own Professor Deborah Merritt has been selected as the University Distinguished Lecturer. This is a tremendous honor for her, and we all look forward to hearing her remarks on May 3.

We are also fortunate to be able to turn to our diverse and talented alumni for so many rich examples of leadership. From current and former Ohio Senators Howard Metzenbaum '41 and George Voinovich '61 to the 1998 Outstanding Young Alumna, Julia Dorrian '96, who volunteers with the Campaign for Human Development, graduates of the College of Law distinguish themselves in public service and acts of private leadership.

I hope to build on the great foundation we have laid in the training of leaders. I would like us to discuss leadership more directly and discover what we can do to expand our students' awareness and expectations of what they bring to the practice of law. I hope that many of you will join us in this dialogue.

LETTING THE FACTS DECIDE

Judge Thomas Brings Career on Bench to a Close

In his more than 40 years on the bench, Federal Judge William K. Thomas '35 earned a reputation for being fair, conscientious, and sincere. More than once, he would shed his robes, roll up his shirt sleeves, and act as the mediator between sparring parties.

"I think you should hear everybody out and then let the facts decide," he said following his retirement from the bench in the Northern District of Ohio early last year. "That's what a jury does, and I think that's what a judge should do."

He has presided over some high profile cases: the settlements of the defendants in the Kent State cases, the case against Cleveland mobster James T. Licavoli, the freedom of speech case that allowed the production of "Oh! Calcutta!" to appear in Cleveland, and the hiring of minority police officers in the city of Cleveland, to mention a few.

Judge William K. Thomas '35 now resides in a Cleveland retirement home overlooking University Circle.

It's a long way from Page Hall in the depths of the Great Depression. "I had thought I was going to get into writing and selling advertising," he recalled of his time as an undergraduate at Ohio State. "I couldn't get a job, so I went to law school."

His parents helped finance his education. "The fees were not excessive," he recalled. But there was more to the story.

"My older brother, John, graduated from law school (in 1930)," he said. A tragedy occurred during a picnic on a farm south of Columbus. "We were shooting pigeons," he said. "My finger touched the trigger and blew off part of my brother's leg. We put him on the ground, put a tourniquet on him to save him from bleeding to death, but he picked up gas gangrene lying there on the ground in the dirty barnyard," he recalled. "Four days later he was dead."

The incident made an impression. "I really felt that I was living two lives when I was in law school," he recalled.

Entering the College of Law in 1932, Judge Thomas remembers the camaraderie among the students. "I can still see the guys on the Page Hall steps pitching pennies from the top down to the bottom," he noted. "Whoever got closest to the line won," he added with a laugh.

"The classes were not large," he recalled. "I think we had only about 54 or 55 people, so you got to know people pretty well. That was part of it."

He was among the class who initiated the Ohio State Law Journal, agreeing to pay an additional $3.00 a quarter to finance the effort. "There were a group of us that were first asked to write notes that appeared in the Ohio State Bar Journal, the weekly publication for the Ohio State Bar Association," he recalled. "Then that merged into the work on the law journal." His friend, the late Honorable Robert E. Leach, served as the editor, while Thomas was the president of the Student Bar Association.

"The idea of representing both sides interested me"

Following graduation and a stint in the U.S. Navy during World War II, Thomas and his wife, Dorothy, and two young children moved to the Cleveland area, where he was setting up a legal practice. Wanting to find a small town atmosphere, they settled on a house in Chagrin Falls, just inside the Geauga County line. It was a decision that would change their lives.

Four years later, when then-Governor Frank Lausche was looking to replace a Geauga County judge who had died, he realized his friend lived in the county. "I agreed I would take the job for six months," he recalled. "The pay was 10 percent of what I'd made as a trial lawyer, $4,700," he added.

It was there he presided over his first high-profile case, the closing of the Pettibone Club, an infamous gambling joint in Chardon allegedly run by mobsters. The sheriff had been trying to close it down for years, to no avail. A grand jury had been looking into the matter, but its term had expired. Thomas recalled the jury, which indicted the owners, most of whom pleaded guilty to gambling charges. The result? The Pettibone Club was shuttered forever.

By that time, the judge realized he enjoyed sitting on the bench. "The idea of representing both sides interested me," he noted. "I could always see there was something to be said on the other side, too."

He ran for the probate bench and won in Geauga County. "I'd come to love judging," he added. But by that time, the size of his family had grown. "I couldn't raise a family of four children on that salary," he admitted. A move of a few blocks within Chagrin Falls put his residence in Cuyahoga County, paving the way for him to be appointed to the Cuyahoga County Common Pleas bench by Lausche in 1953. The appointment included an increase in salary.

It was on the Cuyahoga County bench that he presided over another high profile case. He was the judge who released Sam Sheppard on $50,000 bond in 1954 after Sheppard was arrested and charged with murdering his wife, Marilyn.

Appointed to the federal bench

Judge Thomas gained a reputation as a meticulous, hard-working judge during more than 40 years on the bench.

in 1965 by then-President Lyndon B. Johnson, Thomas's most memorable case was settling the lawsuits brought by students injured when Ohio National Guardsmen fired on a crowd of demonstrators at Kent State University. Set to try the case a second time in 1979 after the Court of Appeals had reversed the original opinion that favored the defendants, Thomas met with the lawyers in his chambers. There they pounded out a carefully worded agreement in which the State of Ohio agreed to pay the plaintiffs $675,000, according to the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Along the way, he developed a reputation as a meticulous, hard-working jurist who treated lawyers, criminals and parties to civil lawsuits with respect and fairness.

"He's one of the best I've ever tried a case in front of," James R. Willis, a veteran criminal defense lawyer, told the Plain Dealer last year. Willis represented the Cleveland mafia boss, James T. Licavoli when Licavoli was convicted in 1982 of racketeering. "He was patient, he listened to what you were saying, and he ruled decisively. That's the whole package."

The Licavoli case, in which the mob figure and others were convicted of conspiring to kill mobster Daniel J. Green, was perhaps the highest profile criminal case of Thomas's career. Green, killed by a bomb in 1977, was in competition for control of organized crime in the Cleveland area.

A senior judge since 1981, he has handled a small docket of cases and occasionally held trials to help other judges. His wife, Dorothy, died in 1992; he remains close to his children and grandchildren. He has started to put a few of his life experiences on paper. "Nothing fancy," he told the Plain Dealer. "Just a few notes for my children."

He has learned not to look backwards. "I just try to find new things to do," he said.

THE JUSTICE FOR CHILDREN PROJECT CELEBRATES ITS FIRST YEAR

BY PROFESSOR KATHERINE HUNT FEDERLE

Academics and researchers in law and the social sciences came together last month to consider the legal, economic, medical, health, and policy ramifications of the Welfare Reform Act, as well as its implications for our nation's children. The symposium was part of the ongoing efforts of the Justice for Children Project to examine the legal needs of those who often cannot defend themselves.

The Project is a major educational and interdisciplinary research initiative at the College of Law, and it celebrated its first anniversary in January.

This spring's symposium, The Implications of Welfare Reform for Children, considered the consequences of the Welfare Reform Act for children. The interdisciplinary conference provided an important opportunity for exchange among those who are working on issues pertaining to children and welfare reform, while establishing a baseline from which we may evaluate future developments in this area.

The symposium was sponsored by the Project and the Ohio State Law Journal with financial support from the Center for Law, Policy, and Social Science and the College of Law. Conference papers will be published in the Ohio State Law Journal in the Fall of 1999.

The Project, under the auspices of the College of Law and the Center for Law, Policy and Social Science, sponsored its first conference in 1995. Justice for Children—Meeting the Basic Needs of Children: Defining Public and Private Responsibilities attracted lawyers, scholars, and researchers from a number of different disciplines. The interdisciplinary papers presented focused on the public role in the private family and were published in Volume 57 of The Ohio State Law Journal in 1996.

The Justice for Children Project is supported by the College of Law and the University through an academic enrichment grant, and by the Center for Law, Policy, and Social Science. Its mission is to explore ways in which the law may be used to improve the experiences of children, conduct original scholarship and research while considering the insights of other disciplines and help students construct and pursue legal and nonlegal solutions to many of the intractable problems confronting children.

Two components make up the Project. The first involves the direct legal representation of children and their interests in the local court systems through the Justice for Children Practicum. The second creates opportunities for faculty to engage in original research and writing in a number of areas affecting children and their families.

The Practicum is a one-semester course open to eligible third-year law students, who are certified by the Ohio Supreme Court as Legal Interns. They represent clients under faculty supervision in a variety of proceedings implicating the rights of children, including abuse and neglect, delinquency, status offense, and termination of parental rights cases. Interns work with their clients at all stages of the representation and participate in pretrial hearings and at trial.

The four-hour classroom element of the course provides students with an opportunity to learn lawyering skills within a substantive context while developing an approach to the thoughtful and ethical practice of law. Students also discuss their cases in class and in weekly case round meetings. This case discussion creates additional opportunities to explore strategic and ethical issues.

The objective of the Practicum is not to represent a large number of clients, but instead to assemble a selection of cases that provide the Interns with an opportunity to learn a good lawyering model. The Practicum's clients benefit from the fact that participating students represent a limited number of clients per semester and receive feedback from faculty at least weekly. By being diligent investigators of the facts and the law, and by being zealous and aggressive advocates, students have been able to obtain positive results for their own clients and to begin to improve the quality of representation afforded all children.

A primary goal of the Project is to produce scholarship that provides philosophical support for the work of children's rights advocates by building bridges between theory and practice and by considering and integrating the findings of other disciplines. Through the publication of scholarly articles, the support of interdisciplinary research, and the promotion and sponsorship of symposia, faculty and students explore particular issues affecting children from an interdisciplinary perspective. Such research is particularly important in light of increasing public concerns about juvenile crime, education, and safe families.

Professor Federle is an Associate Professor of Law and Director of Justice for Children Project. She joined the College of Law faculty in January 1998 and teaches Children and the Law and the Justice for Children Practicum. Professor Federle began teaching in 1986 at the University of Hawaii School of Law, where she held a dual appointment as a researcher at the Center for Youth Research. She subsequently joined the faculty at Tulane Law School in 1990 and was selected by the 1996 graduating class to receive the Felix Frankfurter Distinguished Teaching Award. Professor Federle has been especially active in the field of juvenile law. She has taught substantive and clinical juvenile and criminal law courses and has published a number of articles on the subject of children's rights. She is admitted to practice in Ohio, Washington, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia, and she drafted the ABA's recently-adopted Standards for the Representation of Children in Abuse and Neglect Cases.

Name Change for Center for Sociolegal Studies Approved

Center for Law, Policy, and Social Science Unveils Expanded Interdisciplinary Program

The College of Law's program for studying the effects of law on society, the Center for Sociolegal Studies, has been renamed. At the same time, the Center has created new linkages with colleges and departments throughout the University, according to Professor James J. Brudney, Director of the newly designated Center for Law, Policy, and Social Science.

"Over the years, the use of the term 'sociolegal' has created some confusion," he says. "The Center's mission is to encourage and support collaboration by law faculty with social scientists and scholars from other disciplines to examine how law influences social conditions and public policy."

"The new name reflects more clearly what the Center does: interdisciplinary work that is scholarly, draws on a range of social science perspectives, and also has practical policy-related value," he adds.

On behalf of the Center, Professor Brudney submitted the proposed name change to the University Council for Academic Affairs. The Council formally approved the change in late February.

"By reflecting the breadth of our research and conference activities relating to social science scholarship and matters of public policy, the new name will be more consistent with what the Center in fact does on a regular basis," says College of Law Dean Gregory H. Williams.

Currently, about 15 College of Law faculty affiliated with the Center are studying the economic and social consequences of particular statutes or judicial decisions; the behavior of legal actors, including judges, juries, and regulators; and the operation of legal processes such as mediation, negotiation, and other alternative forms of dispute resolution. A number of projects are cross-cultural, examining practices in England, Germany, and other countries as well as the United States. Since its inception in 1989, the Center has had a formal and unique relationship with the Centre for Socio-legal Studies at Oxford University in England.

In addition to supporting faculty research, the Center helps organize national conferences that bring together scholars and practitioners from law and the social sciences to discuss major public policy concerns. The Justice for Children conference in 1995 and the 1998 conference examining the future of affirmative action in higher education were co-sponsored by the Center, as was March's symposium on the implications of welfare reform for children. An upcoming symposium on intellectual property issues coordinated by Professor Sheldon W. Halpern also will receive financial and in-kind support from the Center.

"We try to leverage our modest amounts of money to support interdisciplinary scholarship that addresses issues of national importance," says Brudney.

Future initiatives sponsored by the Center include a proposal to develop a Legislation Clinic at the College of Law. Students and faculty in the clinic would work with state legislators and the nonpartisan Legislative Service Commission to research issues, assist in drafting legislation and bill analyses, and summarize enacted bills.

"We are located in the state capital," stressed Brudney. "A legislation clinic would provide a public service to the state legislative branch as well as the broader university community." The program also would be open to students from other Ohio law schools who want to gain such experience at the state level.

In conjunction with the name change, the Center has begun to invite faculty from other University units to become Fellows of the Center. Fellows must have a demonstrated interest in law topics and a willingness to interact with law faculty on interdisciplinary research, including being prepared to participate in the three workshops sponsored by the Center each semester. More than ten faculty members from the departments of political science, sociology, economics, history, African American and African studies, and English have accepted the Center's invitation.

Law and graduate students who are actively engaged in interdisciplinary research with law faculty also will be invited to serve as Members of the Center. They will be encouraged to attend meetings and some may be invited to make a presentation.

"One of the goals of the Center is to make clear how important interdisciplinary scholarship and thinking are for lawyers in the 21st century," concludes Brudney. "We believe that collaborative work produced through the Center for Law, Policy, and Social Science will provide important educational opportunities for our students. By absorbing what other disciplines have to offer regarding theoretical and practical aspects of our legal system, our students will bring more depth and sophistication to whatever field of law they choose to enter."

Faculty News

The College of Law faculty continue to distinguish themselves professionally and personally. The latest news of our professors includes:

Director of Legal Writing, Mary Beth Beazley, taught a CLE in March on "The Psychology of Legal Writing" sponsored by the Ohio Supreme Court.

Welcome to one of the newest members of the College of Law family! Samuel Rudolph Cole made his appearance on Christmas Eve 1998, weighing in at 9 pounds, 1.6 ounces, and measuring 21 inches long.

Professor Sarah Cole and Samuel Rudolph Cole

Congratulations to mom and dad, Professor Sarah Cole and her husband, Doug.

Professors Cole, Doug Berman, and Tom Gallanis were each awarded University Seed Grants to support their future research.

In February, Professor James J. Brudney delivered two days of training to Department of Labor professionals in Washington, D.C. He addressed the law governing unions and collective bargaining, and the obstacles and challenges facing those who seek to interpret and enforce federal labor relations law.

Professor Brudney authored an article about the Congressional Accountability Act that appears in the Winter 1999 issue of the Harvard Journal on Legislation. The article examines the speech or debate clause and conflict of legislative staff in Congress. He also authored a book review, "To Strike or Not to Strike," which discusses a recent book about a major failed industrial strike in the late 1980s. The review, which will appear in the Wisconsin Law Review later this spring, explores the tensions between local unions and international union leadership that accompany strikes in the modern era.

On March 12, Professor Ruth Colker spoke at the University of California at Berkeley on the Americans with Disabilities Act at a symposium sponsored by the Berkeley Journal of Employment and Labor Law.

Professor

Katherine (Kate) Hunt Federle and her husband, Paul Haynes, welcomed the arrival of their new son, John Paul Haynes, III (aka J.P.), on February 1. He weighed in at 7 pounds, 1 ounce and was 19.65 inches long. Professor Federle is the director of the Justice for Children Project.

Professor Kate Federle and John Paul Haynes, III

Professors Howard P. Fink, Arthur F. Greenbaum, and Charles E. Wilson sent their new treatise Guide to the Ohio Rules of Civil Procedure to their publisher, LEXIS Law Publishing, last fall. It is scheduled for an April publication. Professor Greenbaum continued his work, with the law firm of Jones, Day, Reavis and Pogue, on the Ohio portion of Cornell's American Legal Ethics Library. The library, a fifty-state, on-line treatise on professional responsibility, is being released in stages, as portions are completed, and can be accessed at www.law.cornell.edu/ethics. Professor Greenbaum also continued to serve as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Ohio CLE Institute, and chaired its merger evaluation committee.

In January, Professor Fink's comment in the Indiana Law Journal's Symposium Issue devoted to A Reappraisal of the Supplement Jurisdiction Statute, 28 U.S.C. sec 1367, was published. "Supplemental Jurisdiction: Take It to the Limit!" comments on papers presented at the Federal Jurisdiction section of the Association of American Law Schools' annual meeting in 1998. Professor Fink's comment advocates elimination of the "complete diversity" rule and an accompanying expansion of federal court jurisdiction. He also published the 1999

Professor Foley Becomes State Solicitor

Professor Edward B. "Ned" Foley has taken a two-year leave of absence from the College of Law to assume the post of Ohio State Solicitor. He began his new job on January 4, replacing Jeffrey S. Sutton '90, the State Solicitor since 1995.

Sutton returned to private practice. He also serves the College as an adjunct professor and president-elect of the Law Alumni Society.

The solicitor general, a position created by former Attorney General Lee Fisher, is the state's top appellate lawyer in charge of handling the most important cases.

Although Professor Foley is on leave, he continues to teach the Education Law Seminar that he was scheduled to teach for the Spring semester.

Anita DiPasquale, Supervising Attorney in the Justice for Children Practicum, is teaching the section of Constitutional Law that Professor Foley was slated to teach. She is a magna cum laude graduate of Case Western Reserve University School of Law, where she received the AmJur Award for the highest grades in Constitutional Law, Legislation, Civil Rights, and State and Local Government.

Professor Foley has taught at OSU since 1991. He previously worked as a lawyer in Washington and as a law clerk for the late Justice Harry A. Blackmun of the U.S. Supreme Court.

He is a 1986 graduate of the Columbia University School of Law.

"It is a great honor and testament to his reputation that Professor Foley has been asked to assume this important post," said Dean Gregory H. Williams. "We certainly will miss him as part of our regular faculty, but are pleased that he has the opportunity to serve the citizens of the State of Ohio in this capacity. All of us have admired the work of our graduate, Jeffrey Sutton, and know that Professor Foley will continue that same fine tradition."

Faculty News

edition of his Summary Guide to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Professor Thomas P. Gallanis is back from a semester at that school up north. Welcome home from the University of Michigan! He reports that he has been named associate book review editor for H-Law, the online discussion group sponsored by the American Society for Legal History. He will be responsible for all reviews concerning non-U.S. legal history.

Professor
Thomas P.
Gallanis

Kluwer Law International has just published Professor Sheldon Halpern's new book, Fundamentals of United States Intellectual Property Law: Copyright, Patent, and Trademark, in both hard bound and paperback versions. In addition, he received a substantial grant from the Battelle Endowment for the purpose of presenting two annual interdisciplinary conferences on the impact of technological change on the creation, dissemination, and protection of intellectual property.

On November 13, Professor Louis A. Jacobs gave a lecture entitled "Developing Tort Claims in Wrongful Discharge Litigation" to several hundred attorneys at the Midwest Labor and Employment Law Conference in Columbus. On December 10, he gave a two-hour seminar to the National Employment Lawyers Association of Illinois in Chicago. The seminar was entitled "Using Rules of Evidence and Motions in Limine to Win Pretrial and at Trial."

Professor Jacobs also spoke on evidence at the Tenth Annual Metropolitan Washington Employment Lawyers Association Employment Law Conference in Washington, D.C. on February 26. He joined with Associate Dean Hébert in a panel presentation on "Current Issues in Employee Privacy" for the Ohio CLE Institute and also gave a presentation, "State and Federal Discrimination Law Causes of Action," at the Institute's Wrongful Discharge 1999 program. He also completed the annual supplement to Jacobs and Ruzicho, Employment Practices Manual (West).

Another amicus brief primarily authored by Professor Jacobs was filed in February in the Supreme Court of Ohio. It discussed the issue of whether an employee alleging hostile environment sexual harassment who successfully performs her job duties is precluded by that success from showing interference with her work due to such an environment.

Professor Timothy Jost appeared at a press conference at the National Press Club in Washington discussing the report that he prepared for the Mayday Foundation on Medicare and Medicaid financing of pain management.

In late January, Professor Jost attended an invited colloquium sponsored by the American Health Lawyers Association to discuss the future of fraud and abuse law. His article on public payment for pain management was published in the Journal of Law, Medicine, and Ethics, and his article on administrative law issues in Medicare will appear in March in the Administrative Law Review.

Professor
Stanley Laughlin

Last year, Professor Stanley Laughlin organized a symposium on "Legal Transferability: Transferability of Legal Concepts and Legal Mechanisms Across National and International Borders." The symposium was financed by a grant that Professor Laughlin received from the Office of Research on behalf of the Center for Law, Policy, and Social Science (Sociolegal Center). It became part of a larger conference on Comparative Constitutional Law, held at the Greater Columbus Convention Center also sponsored by the College of Humanities at The Ohio State University and the Council on World Affairs. Professor Laughlin acted as the moderator of the symposium, which involved presentations by distinguished scholars, including the former Chief Justice of the Federated States of Micronesia, The Honorable Edward King.

Richard J. Goldstone, architect of South Africa's constitution and former international war crimes prosecutor was the keynote speaker for the conference. Papers from the conference will be published soon as a monograph by the University of Virginia Press.

During the summer of 1998, Professor Laughlin directed and taught in the Ohio State University-Oxford University Summer Pre-Law Program conducted in Oxford, England.

Earlier this year, the bi-annual supplement for Professor Laughlin's book, The Law of the United States Territories and Affiliated Jurisdictions was published. His chapter, "Ethics Beyond the Code," was published last year in the Ohio Bar Foundation's Practical Legal Ethics, and has become the basis for a collaborative effort for a book on professional ethics, co-authored by Philip Smith, Professor of Educational Philosophy.

Professor James Meeks served as a commentator on a panel discussing mergers in the regulated utility industries (telecommunications, electric power and hospitals) at the annual meeting of the Association of American Law Schools on January 8 in New Orleans.

Professor Deborah Jones Merritt authored an essay responding to a lecture by Chief Judge Richard Posner. Her essay, which will appear in the Michigan Law Review, discusses both the role of social science in formulating constitutional rules and the Supreme Court's decision in the Virginia Military Institute case. She circulated the essay as part of a December workshop on "Constitutional Theory and Empiricism" held at the Georgetown University Law Center.

At the January 1999 meeting of the Association of American Law Schools, Professor Merritt moderated two panels, one on Income Distribution and another on Innovative Approaches to Law Teaching. She also will serve on both the AALS Advisory Group on Celebration of the AALS Centennial (which will occur in January 2000) and an AALS Advisory Group on Electronic Publishing.

In October, Professor Alan C. Michaels' article, "Acceptance: The Missing Mental State 71 S. Cal. L. Rev. 953 (1998)," was published in the Southern California Law Review.

At the January 1999 meeting of the Association of American Law Schools, he received the Outstanding Scholarly Paper Award for his paper, "Constitutional Innocence." At the same conference, he presented the paper at the invitation of the AALS. In February, the article was published in the Harvard Law Review 112 Harv. L. Rev. 838 (1999).

Professor Earl Finbar Murphy attended the meeting of the World Society for Ekistics at the University of Pittsburgh Center for International Studies in March. The society is comprised of persons in the science of human settlement, with its headquarters in Athens, Greece. Professor Murphy has been involved with the society since 1969 and is a past president.

Professor John Quigley gave several presentations to the International Relations Department at Belarus State University in December. "The students to whom I lectured asked a lot of questions, and we had good discussion," he says.

He also spoke to the Institute of Management of the President of Belarus, Law Department; the Minsk City Collegium of Attorneys; the U.S. Information Agency; and the Belarus Association of Journalists.

On January 22, Professor Quigley gave a speech, "The Legal Significance of a New Declaration of Palestine Statehood," at a symposium in Washington, D.C. organized by the Center for Policy Analysis on Palestine. It was part of a program on an anticipated declaration of statehood by the Palestinian authorities.

Professor Nancy H. Rogers

Professor Nancy H. Rogers has been appointed to the Erlenborn Commission to study and report to the Board of Directors of the Legal Services Corporation on regulations regarding representation of eligible aliens. She also serves as a member of the Board of Directors of the Legal Services Corporation, the federally-funded agency that provides financial support for civil legal services for persons unable to pay for legal services.

Professor Rogers' recent publications include the 1998 Supplement to her co-authored treatise, Mediation: Law, Policy, Practice and co-authored an opening essay in the last issue of Dispute Resolution Magazine, focusing on confidentiality in mediation.

Professor Swire Named to White House Post

Professor Peter Swire has been appointed to the newly created position of Chief Counselor for Privacy in the White House Office of Management and Budget.

Swire will coordinate privacy policy with respect to both public- and private-sector use of personal information. He also will be a point of contact for privacy agencies in other countries.

Vice President Gore, who last year called for increased focus on privacy and proposed an Electronic Bill of Rights, said, "Professor Swire will lead our efforts to make our new economy and our newest technology consistent with one of our oldest values — privacy. Specifically, he will move forward on our agenda to protect every American's right to privacy amid explosive growth in the collection and use of personal records of all kinds."

Swire will be on half-time leave from his Ohio State position until May 1, when he will begin a full-time leave.

Swire, who joined the Ohio State faculty in 1996, is an internationally recognized expert on computer privacy issues, such as the uses and limits of cryptography, financial privacy, and the protection of personal information in electronic data transfer.

He is the co-author of None of Your Business: World Data Flows, Electronic Commerce and the Internet Privacy Directive, published in 1998 by the Brookings Institute Press. He was a recent consultant to the U.S. Department of Commerce, assisting in negotiations with the European Union on how new, strict European privacy laws should apply to transfers of personal information to the United States. A frequent speaker on legal issues related to privacy and the Internet, Swire chaired a panel at the January annual meeting of the Association of American Law Schools called "The Walls have Eyes and Ears and Telescopic Lenses: Privacy and Computer-Mediated Surveillance."

"We certainly will miss Peter as part of our regular faculty," said Gregory H. Williams, dean of the College of Law. "Peter has emerged as a national leader on cyberspace and privacy issues and we are proud that he can enter public service for our country."

OSU President William E. Kirwan concurred: "It is an honor for the university and a reflection of the high caliber of our College of Law to have one of our faculty chosen for such an important and influential national position. We will miss having Professor Swire here, but we are pleased to give him leave to fulfill this important role. This reflects Ohio State's commitment to service to the larger community and to being a leader in meeting the challenges of new technologies."

Swire previously taught at the University of Virginia School of Law, and was an associate in the Washington, D.C., firm of Powell, Goldstein, Frazer and Murphy. In the year following his 1985 graduation from the Yale Law School, he clerked for Judge Ralph K. Winter in the U.S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit. His undergraduate degree is from Princeton University.

Professor Allan Samansky's article, "Child Care Expenses and the Income Tax," was published in Volume 50 of the Florida Law Review. In addition, Professor Samansky was a speaker on "The Money Panel" of the What You Need To Know About Flying Solo seminar, sponsored by the Ohio CLE Institute on November 11, 1998.

Professor Josh Stulberg

Professor Josh Stulberg conducted academic workshops in Croatia and Romania during December. The seminars were for selected university professors who were interested in analyzing the relationship between democratic institution building, the rule of law, and dispute resolution theory and practice. During the program, which was coordinated by Partners for Democratic Change with support from the Agency for International Development, Professor Stulberg met with professors of law, business, psychology, and sociology who are committed to developing appropriate course work, policy projects, and comparative research initiatives that embrace these themes.

In 1999, Professor Douglas Whaley will publish new editions of three of his casebooks with Aspen: Sales, Payment Law, and Contracts. During the 1999-2000 school year, he will be a visiting professor of law at Boston College.

Vice President for Student Affairs and Law Professor David Williams, II received the Distinguished Alumni Award at Northern Michigan University's mid-year Centennial Commencement on Saturday, December 19, 1998. He graduated from NMU with a bachelor's degree in social science in 1969 and a master's degree in education in 1970.

Professor Williams has been elected as Chair-elect of the Student Affairs Council of the National Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities.

Suing Over Spilled Coffee: How Hot Is the Tort Crisis?

Jury verdicts are modest in most personal injury lawsuits, according to Professor Deborah Jones Merritt, confirming the view of most legal scholars—that there is little need for tort reform. Her research in Franklin County, Ohio, shows that only a small percentage of filed claims proceed to trial. And both win rates and average verdicts are low for most personal injury claims.

Her research was made possible through a grant from the American Board of Trial Advocates. The grant was secured with the help of Michael F. Colley '61, a Columbus attorney and vice chair of the University's Board of Trustees.

She will discuss her work on tort reform during the University Distinguished Lecture at the Film/Video Theater at the Wexner Center at The Ohio State University on May 3. The lecture will begin at 4:00 p.m. and may be heard internationally via the World Wide Web at http://www.osu.edu/Distinguished_Lecture. A reception will follow at the Wexner Center Café.

The University Distinguished Lecture Series was founded in 1996 as one of the University's highest honors for a senior member of the faculty. The lectureship is awarded in recognition of outstanding academic achievement, particularly, but not exclusively, in research, scholarship, or creative activity.

The President's and Provost's Advisory Committee reviews nominations and recommends candidates to the President and Provost for final selection. The University Distinguished Lecturer receives an award of $5,000 to be spent in support of an academic program or project of his or her choice. Professor Merritt has designated that her award should be given to support the Center for Law, Policy, and Social Science at the College of Law.

Professor Merritt holds the John Deaver Drinko/Baker and Hostetler Chair in Law. She earned her B.A. summa cum laude from Harvard University and her J.D. from Columbia University, where she was a James Kent Scholar and Managing Editor of the Columbia Law Review. Professor Merritt clerked for both Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg (then a judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit) and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor on the Supreme Court of the United States. She also practiced law in Atlanta and taught at the University of Illinois, where she served as Associate Dean for Academic Affairs at the College of Law, before accepting Ohio State's Drinko Chair in 1995.

Professor Merritt has published widely in the fields of federal-state relations, affirmative action, and equality. Her work has been cited by the United States Supreme Court, as well as by lower court judges and scholars in many fields. She has chaired or served on several nationwide committees for the Association of American Law Schools and represents that Association to the Consortium of Social Science Associations. She has taught courses on comparative constitutional law in Europe, and has consulted with judges in both the United States and Ukraine on issues of federalism, judicial review, and sex discrimination.

During the last decade, Professor Merritt has completed a series of studies using social science techniques to investigate legal theories. Her work on tort reform, affirmative action, and legal education has stimulated legal scholars to explore applications of social science to other legal theories, thus helping establish law and social science as a growing field.

JDR Sweeps Student Section of 1998 CPR Awards

Two staff members on the Ohio State Journal on Dispute Resolution have been honored for their writing in the area of alternative dispute resolution.

Matthew Adam Tenerowicz '98

Congratulations go to Matthew A. Tenerowicz '98 and Roseanne T. Mitchell, a current third-year student, for sweeping the 1998 CPR Awards for Excellence in ADR, given annually by the CPR Institute for Dispute Resolution.

Both placed in the Student Articles category. It is the first that award-winners are both from the same school.

Tenerowicz received first place for "Case Dismissed' — Or Is It? Sanctions for Failure to Participate in Court-Mandated ADR." Mitchell received second place for "Resolving Domain Name-Trademark Disputes: A New System of Alternative Dispute Resolution Is Needed In Cyberspace."

Last year's Schwartz Lecturer, Craig McEwen, also received second place in the academic category for his lecture at Ohio State, "Making or Breaking Mediation: The Role of Lawyers." The lecture was printed in the Ohio

Roseanne T. Mitchell '99

State Journal on Dispute Resolution.

The honorees were recognized at the Winter Meeting of the CPR Institute on Thursday, January 28 at the University Club in New York.

The 1998 award winners were selected by an independent panel of 37 practicing attorneys, corporate counsel and law professors.

The CPR Institute is a leader in the movement to develop alternatives to the high costs of litigation. It provides tools to effectively prevent, manage, or resolve significant business and public disputes. The annual awards program was initiated in 1983 to honor outstanding ADR use and scholarship. It is sponsored by CIGNA Corporation.

Carter C. Kissell Establishes Professorship

Law School Impacted His Life

Carter C. Kissell '27 is not shy about the benefits his education of the college of Law afforded him during his 98 years. "The decision to study law and my years at the law school made a vital difference in my life," he says. For that reason, he's happy to share some of the fruits of his success so that other young men and women can enjoy the same opportunities.

"I think the practice of law is a tremendous field," he says. "It requires very talented and knowledgeable people, so it is very important that there are schools where students go to learn those skills," he adds. "Ohio State, as far as I'm concerned, is it."

With that in mind, he has contributed more than $750,000 toward the creation of the Carter C. Kissell Professorship.

"Because I feel I owe the law school something, I've had a long-term interest in the law school. I decided I'd do it now, rather than with one of the trusts."

The Carter C. Kissell Professor of Law position is currently held by Dean Gregory H. Williams, a fact that pleases Kissell. "I've always thought a lot of the Dean," he says.

It marks the second time he has made a significant gift to the College. In 1993, he created a scholarship in memory of the law professor who most impacted his life—Alonzo H. Tuttle.

"Professor Tuttle was the sole reason I went into law," Kissell recalls. "He was always very helpful to me all the way through law school and after I graduated."

The scholarship is awarded annually and provides full tuition at the College for a deserving law student. He has also provided leadership gifts to both the Centennial Campaign and the Advancement Fund and has generously supported the C. William O'Neill Professorship, the Sphinx program, and his graduating class fund. His total giving to the College now exceeds $1 million.

Dean Gregory H. Williams and Carter C. Kissell '27 visits in Kissell's Chagrin Falls home.

1998 Graduates Take Jobs Around the World

Members of the Class of 1998 were not content to stay in the Buckeye State following graduation last spring. According to statistics released in February, 89 of the 221 graduates responding to the College of Law's employment survey were employed in 27 other states, in the District of Columbia, and overseas. This is up from the previous year, when 59 members of the Class of 1997 reported they found employment in 18 other states.

"Placement statistics are dependent upon the cooperation of the graduating class, and we really appreciate the response we received to our request for information from the Class of 1998," says Amee McKim '94, Placement Director at the College of Law.

The survey is taken six months following graduation by the College of Law Placement Office to learn the employment information for the graduating class.

In addition to the 132 graduates who have taken jobs in Ohio, there are 12 in Illinois, five each in the states of California, Michigan, and

New York, and Washington, D.C., and three each in Georgia, Pennsylvania, and Texas. One graduate is employed in Sweden.

This year, of the 227 members of the class, or 97.4 percent, who responded, 207 are employed. Three individuals are in graduate school and 11 are not employed or are not seeking employment as of February 15, 1999. The number reporting is up from last year, when only 92.4 percent of the class responded to requests for information.

The majority of the class (52.2 percent) is in private law practice. This is down from 1997, when 57.3 percent of those reporting indicated they were working in private firms.

Employees in state government and corporations/other business and industry each account for 7.2 percent, or 15, of the graduates. Another 20, or 9.7 percent, opted to serve in a judicial clerkship during their first year out of law school.

The percentages were similar for the Class of 1997.

"Our graduates continue to have legal and alternative career options across the country," says McKim.

Law Grad Helps Thousands Attend College Through Scholarship Program

A conversation by a College of Law graduate with several high school students more than 30 years ago led to the development of a scholarship program that has helped more than 90,000 young men and women in the Cleveland area go to college.

"They had taken a college preparatory program," Bob Coplan '42 recalls talking with the students at a Cleveland high school. "But because they were not outstanding students, no one had worked with them on how to get to college." He looked around the Cleveland area and found the problem to be "pretty universal." Students who wanted to go to college, but didn't have top-of-the-class grades, were often left to their own devices to get there.

Beginning in 1960 with five high schools in the Cleveland Public Schools, he helped provide scholarships to 125 students. Today, the Cleveland Scholarship Programs has helped more than 90,000 students, 93 percent of whom attended colleges and vocational schools in Ohio. The program serves all the public high schools in Cleveland and several suburban and parochial schools in Cuyahoga County and has an operating budget in excess of $2 million.

It's a concept that has been copied in one form or another in more than 40 cities around the country, including Columbus, Cincinnati, Baltimore, and Boston.

"We are the biggest scholarship program of its kind in the country and the most complete," notes Coplan. In addition to providing funding for advanced education, the program provides counselors in each of the high schools.

"We started out making funds available," he says. "We found that wasn't enough. The counselors in the high schools didn't have time to handle anyone but the top students. Rather than fight about it, we set up our own counselors, which we called advisors." The high schools provided office space for the advisors to work with the juniors and seniors.

On each college campus where there are a number of Cleveland Scholarship students, one or two upperclass students in the program mentor the younger students, who are often the first in their families to go to college. "It's important with those kids who are coming in, especially if they are from an inner city school, to have someone they can relate to," he stresses.

Coplan finds greatest satisfaction in talking with the students who have been helped through the program. He enjoys knowing the young people have been assisted in a way that teaches them to help themselves.

"It's a program of aid to self-help," he says. "It's not just throwing money at something," he says.

Coplan is reticent about his involvement in the project. "We built up a fund gradually," he notes. "We got a lot of support from individuals and companies in the Cleveland area."

All the while, Coplan was developing a successful law practice with Benesch, Friedlander, Coplan and Aronoff, located on Public Square in downtown Cleveland. Now retired and living in Naples, Florida, he knows he couldn't have done it alone.

"I had a lot of help from some other people," he admits.

University, where he graduated in political science with honors. Before going to law school, he served in the Marines as a rifle company commander and general staff office from 1953 to 1955.

After graduating from the College of Law in 1958, he served as the first clerk to Justice Potter Stewart, a Cincinnati on the U.S. Supreme Court. In 1959, he joined Graydon, Head and Ritchey.

Active in his community, he was a trustee for the Cincinnati Zoo and served as director of the Cincinnati Health and Welfare Council. He was also a director of the University of Pennsylvania Alumni Club and a member of the board of counselors of Spalding University, Louisville.

He is survived by a son, John Lloyd Evans IV, Terrace Park; a daughter, Mary Elizabeth Quinones, Loveland, and three grandchildren.

Rodney B. Baldwin '22 died February 28, 1999. He was 102 years old. A native of Hilliard, Ohio, he attended Officers Training School in 1918 at Fort Sheridan, Ill., where he was appointed Commander of Company 11 Replacement and Training Troops. He continued with that company until the War ended. President Franklin D. Roosevelt awarded him a Certificate of Appreciation on January 11, 1943 for services in World War II in aiding the administration of the Selective Training and Service Act. After passing the bar in 1922, he maintained a law office in the Columbus area until 1975. He contributed to the organization of the Grange Mutual Companies, especially the Life and Casualty Companies. He is survived by his son, Forrest F. Baldwin, Ocala, Fla.; three grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; his brother and sister-in-law, Ted M. and Isabelle Baldwin, Dublin, Ohio; a niece; and two nephews.

James J. Weaver '33 died December 23, 1998 at the age of 90. A retired businessman and attorney, he was a former manager of Long's Bookstore. In later years, he did historical research and freelance writing. He is survived by his daughter and son-in-law, Mary and James Cummins, Brooklin, Maine; son, James J. Weaver, Jr.; Columbus; son and daughter-in-law, John W. and Virginia Weaver, Tacoma, Wash.; six grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren.

Benjamin F. Lehman '35 died February 5, 1998. He was 89 years old. He began practicing law in 1937 at the Cincinnati firm of Saylor and Saylor, working with his uncle, Milton Saylor. He is survived by his daughter, Winifred L. Hohlt, Plymouth, N.H., and his son, Ben Lehman, Richmond, Va.

David M. Postlewait '37 of Bexley, Ohio, and Key Colony Beach, Fla., died December 20, 1998 in Bexley. He practiced law in Columbus for many years and was a past president of the Columbus Bar Association and the Columbus Athletic Club. He was a Fellow of the Ohio State Bar Foundation and served a term as State Representative for Franklin County. He is survived by his wife, Marcia Lisle McClintock Postlewaite; son and daughter-in-law, Dr. David S. and Shirley Postlewaite, Columbus; daughter and son-in-law, Edith P. and Stephen Flagg, New Haven, Conn.; three stepdaughters, Marcia Folsom, Boston, Mass., Carolyn Peter, Barrington, R.I., and Abbie Craine, Snoqualmie, Wash.; three grandchildren; brother and sister-in-law, William and Margaret Postlewaite; and a sister, Catherine Frear, Florida.

R. Donald Cultice '51 died December 18, 1998 at his resident in Zanesville, Ohio, at the age of 76. A pilot during World War II, he served in the Pacific Theatre. A Zanesville resident since 1951, he was a partner in the law firm of Cultice and Brown at the time of his death, where he practiced with his son, Peter, and his daughter and son-in-law, Susan and James Brown. He is survived by his wife of 55 years, Betty, as well as two sons and daughters-in-law, Robert and Wendy Cultice, and Peter and Trudy Cultice, and one daughter and son-in-law, Susan and James Brown. He is also survived by five grandchildren.

Harold E. Wonnell '51, 75, died Monday, March 8, 1999 in Columbus.

Prior to his death, the Central Ohio Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers paid tribute to Harold with a reception on February 12. In private practice since 1957, he had worked as a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, was a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Franklin County and was in public relations and investigation for the Thoroughbred Racing Association. He was active with the Columbus Bar Association, the Legal Aid and Public Defender Society, the Franklin County Trial Lawyers Association, the Ohio Academy of Trial Lawyers, the Association of Trial Lawyers, and the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers. A Marine Veteran of World War II, he received the Bronze Star for action in Iwo Jima and Guadalcanal. He is survived by his wife, Nancy '87; children, Vikki Priest, A.J. Correale, Dee Dee Davis, and Gabrielle Morton; grandchildren, Jamie Gordon, Katie Wilson and Madeline Rose Davis; and a brother, William Wonnell.

Richard Martin Lestock '54, Naples, Fla., died January 19, 1999. A former long time resident of Upper Arlington, Ohio, he was active in real estate and securities in the Columbus, Cincinnati, and Lexington, Ky. Areas, and had been an associate of Stock-Peter Production Limited, London, England. He is survived by his wife of 45 years, June M.; sons, Martin J. and James; and one granddaughter.

Simon B. Karas '72 died December 15, 1998 in Columbus after a brief bout with cancer. He was 52. A respected appellate lawyer and ethics specialist, he most recently served as Ohio's lead attorney in the Wilford Berry case—the death penalty “volunteer” who was executed on February 19. He worked his entire legal career in the Ohio Attorney General's office, spanning four Attorneys General during his 26-year tenure. He was Deputy Chief Counsel for Ethics and Appeals for the Attorney General's office at the time of his death. He is survived by his wife, Barbara, daughter, Debra, and son, Jacob.
